

1. Everpath

My strongest all-round candidate

A name that suggests a journey that continues, with a subtle connection to the funeral process. It can represent the journey shared by families, societies, parlours and suppliers without sounding like a funeral home.

Possible tagline: One connected journey. Every farewell.

2. Everbond

Best for trust and community

Focuses on the bonds between families and the communities that support them. It could work especially well for burial societies and a platform built around shared responsibility.

Possible tagline: Connecting care, community and farewell.

3. Farelink

Best for explaining the ecosystem quickly

Combines farewell and link. The purpose is relatively easy to understand: bringing together the people, organisations and services involved in a funeral.

Possible tagline: Every service. One connection.

4. MoyaLink

Best for a distinctive South African identity

Moya can mean spirit or breath in several Nguni language contexts. Paired with "Link," it evokes human connection and remembrance without using the word funeral directly. Language and cultural associations should be checked with your intended communities.

Possible tagline: Bringing people together when it matters most.

5. Memora

Best for a premium, human-centred brand

Suggests memory and remembrance, with a soft, modern sound. It could stretch from funeral administration into family support, memorial products and digital records.

Possible tagline: Connected in care. Remembered with dignity.

6. Kinora

Best for a broad technology brand

A coined, brandable-sounding name inspired by kin and connection. It does not immediately signal funerals, but that gives you room to grow into a wider ecosystem.

Possible tagline: A connected community of care.

4. MoyaLink

Best for a distinctive South African identity

Moya can mean spirit or breath in several Nguni language contexts. Paired with "Link," it evokes human connection and remembrance without using the word funeral directly. Language and cultural associations should be checked with your intended communities.

Possible tagline: Bringing people together when it matters most.

5. Memora

Best for a premium, human-centred brand

Suggests memory and remembrance, with a soft, modern sound. It could stretch from funeral administration into family support, memorial products and digital records.

Possible tagline: Connected in care. Remembered with dignity.

6. Kinora

Best for a broad technology brand

A coined, brandable-sounding name inspired by kin and connection. It does not immediately signal funerals, but that gives you room to grow into a wider ecosystem.

Possible tagline: A connected community of care.